

Disclosure Statement for “The Costs of Corporate Tax Complexity” (Eric Zwick)

The author has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper. This research was conducted while the author worked as an unpaid intern, and later an unpaid expert consultant, in the Office of Tax Analysis in the US Treasury and in the IRS Office of Research, Analysis, and Statistics. Preliminary drafts were reviewed to protect taxpayers from risk of disclosure. These reviews did not influence the structure or content of the paper in a material way.

The author received financial support from the Harvard Business School Doctoral Office and the Booth School of Business at the University of Chicago.