

Nicholas Tilipman
Assistant Professor
School of Public Health
University of Illinois at Chicago tilipman@uic.edu

Disclosure Statement For:

Employer Incentives and Distortions in Health Insurance Design: Implications for Welfare and Costs

Statement of Financial Support for this Project

I have received funding for this project in the form of two small grants from Cornell University during my time as a graduate student. The first was a Human Ecology Alumni Association student grant. The second was an Institute for Social Science Small Grant. Both were internal seed funding sources.

Statement of Unrelated Financial Support

In 2018-2019, I have received consulting fees from Covered California, the state Health Insurance Exchange of California. I served as a policy consultant and advisor to the organization on market stability and affordability measures.

IRB Statement

This project received IRB approval from Cornell University in 2015, during my time as a graduate student, under the auspices of my dissertation advisor, Sean Nicholson.