

Moya Chin

International Monetary Fund

+1-732-822-4706

mchin2@imf.org

<https://sites.google.com/view/moyachin/>

Disclosure Statement for

“When Do Politicians Appeal Broadly? The Economic Consequences of Electoral Rules in Brazil”

This paper received financial support from the Harvard University Institute for Quantitative Social Science and the Harvard University Economics Department.

This paper was written as a chapter of the author’s doctorate dissertation. During that time, the author received fellowship support from the National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellowship Program and the Christopher and Silvana Pascucci Graduate Student Dissertation Fellowship. None of this support comes with a non-disclosure obligation.

The author holds no paid or unpaid positions as officer, director, or board member of a non-profit organization or profit-making entity.

This paper has undergone an internal review at the International Monetary Fund.

This paper did not involve collection of data on human subjects, and as such did not seek approval from any Institutional Review Board.