

Disclosure statement for “Understanding the Link between Temperature and Crime”

Francois Cohen

Francois Cohen has received no financial support from any interested party to conduct this research or any research closely related to this one.

He was researcher at the Grantham Research Institute (LSE) with a fellowship on environmental and energy economics when this research was initiated, and has held postdoctoral positions at the Graduate Institute in Geneva, with financial support from the Swiss National Science Foundation, and the University of Oxford, where he was receiving financial support from the Nature Conservancy to work on research related to Natural Climate Solutions. Francois now works for the Department of Economics of the University of Barcelona. He is a member of the Barcelona Institute of Economics and the Energy Sustainability Chair. He is also honorary research fellow at the University of Oxford, which has allowed Francois to use some of its facilities to develop and run the code for this paper.

Francois Cohen has no relative working with any party potentially interested in this research.