

Disclosure Statement for David Laibson for the paper “The Semblance of Success in Nudging Consumers to Pay Down Credit Card Debt”

- Every submitted article should state the sources of financial support for the particular research it describes. If none, that fact should be stated.
- Each author of a submitted article should identify each interested party from whom he or she has received significant financial support, summing to at least $10,000 in the past three years, in the form of consultant fees, retainers, grants and the like. The disclosure requirement also includes in-kind support, such as providing access to data. If the support in question comes with a nondisclosure obligation, that fact should be stated, along with as much information as the obligation permits. If there are no such sources of funds, that fact should be stated explicitly. An “interested” party is any individual, group, or organization that has a financial, ideological, or political stake related to the article.
- Each author should disclose any paid or unpaid positions as officer, director, or board member of relevant non-profit organizations or profit-making entities. A “relevant” organization is one whose policy positions, goals, or financial interests relate to the article.
- The disclosures required above apply to any close relative or partner of any author.
- Each author must disclose if another party had the right to review the paper prior to its circulation.

The data used in this publication are proprietary, collected by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA), and examined using FCA IT resources. The Financial Conduct Authority had the right to review the paper prior to its circulation. This study was approved by the FCA's IRB as well as by lenders' internal governance.

Laibson was an unpaid academic advisor to the FCA when this field experiment was conducted.

Laibson’s research has been supported by the Pershing Square Foundation fund for the Foundations of Human Behavior Initiative at Harvard University, the TIAA Institute, the National Employment Savings Trust (NEST), and the Russell Sage Foundation. Laibson is a member of the Russell Sage Foundation Board of Trustees (Chair, Finance Committee), a member of the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia Consumer Finance Institute Academic Advisory Board, and a member of the Investment Committee of Harvard’s Pension Plan. Some of these sources were used to fund this research, but none were involved in conducting the research.
